PREFACE.

The books described in the following Catalogue comprise a private Library, the collection of which has been the amusement of the owner, occupying much of his time for several years past.

It will be noticed that the Library is almost wholly composed of "Americana," scarcely any of the works bear a foreign imprint, and most of those which do, relate to America.

A few specialties have claimed particular attention, in the formation of the Catalogue. Some of them have been grouped together, while others have been widely scattered and are thus liable to escape notice. Of the former, the most prominent are Local Histories, works relating to Washington, Memorials of Lincoln, books on the Rebellion, the works of the Mathers, American Trials, and books relating to the Indians. Of the latter, Masonic Works, School Books, books on Witchcraft and Spiritualism, and kindred subjects, Execution Discourses, and works on Suicide, and Pre-existence, may be particularly specified.

The departments of Revolutionary Pamphlets, of works relating to paper money of the period of the Revolution, and works by the early New England Divines, are all well represented.

Several rare imprints will be observed — including Benjamin Franklin, Franklin and Hall, James Franklin, Widow Franklin, and Christopher Sower.

In apology for the fact that many of the books are in boards, or in sheets, I have to say that my preference has always been to use the limited means at my command in the purchase of other books, rather than in binding those already in possession.

The books are generally in good condition, unless otherwise stated;

some imperfections of unimportant books may not have been noted, and on the other hand no attempt has been made to describe particularly the condition of a great majority of the books, which are in the finest possible order.

Collations are given of a few, and I have aimed to call attention to all defects in valuable works.

Objections may, and no doubt will be made, to the use of the words scarce and rare. I have to say, if the terms are offensively prominent, it is the fault of the books, for which the compiler is not answerable. The words are not used for the purpose of enhancing the value of the books. No one is better aware than the writer that rarity and value are not synonymous, and that simple rarity does not necessarily make a book either valuable or desirable. In illustration of this remark, it may be observed that numbers 465 and 1170 both deserve the epithet of rare, both being probably unique; but while I should estimate the former at its cost, say five cents, I should not consider five hundred dollars as misspent in the purchase of the latter, a work so rare that it has not been seen or known since the days of Cotton Mather, — the copy here offered being probably the very one to which he refers in his Life of Eliot.

Nowork has been received from any other collection for this sale. The Catalogue is what it purports to be, that of a private collection strictly; further, it comprises the entire collection, with the sole exception of presentation books, a few duplicates, and a few trifles too unimportant to deserve a place.

It is, of course, quite unnecessary to call the attention of collectors to the rarities contained in the Catalogue; but a list will be found on the third page of the cover, comprising a few of the more prominent volumes of this description. A great number equally rare and quite as important are necessarily omitted.

For the faults in the arrangement and style of the Catalogue, I must plead my total inexperience in such matters. Desiring to class certain specialties together, I have at times sacrificed somewhat of system, and the fact that a number of books were entirely overlooked till many pages of the Catalogue were printed, compelled me to deviate from proper rules of arrangement, and finally to group numerous titles under "Addenda," as the only alternative to their omission.

The arrangement of Local History, under the names of places, is perhaps an innovation, but seems enough more convenient to warrant the change.

Had I lived in New York, where I could have submitted the manuscript to competent bibliographers, I should without doubt have been spared the mortification of falling into numerous errors; but residing in a rural district, this advantage was denied me.

In conclusion, I would say I have done the best I could, and I trust to the kindness of friends to excuse both redundancies and omissions, feeling assured that the appeal will not be made in vain to those who know the disadvantages under which the manuscript has been prepared, those disadvantages being in part an almost total inability to write, on account of partial blindness, and a business requiring attention so constantly, as to leave, for a work of this kind, scarcely any time, except such as is taken from those hours of night usually given to repose.

As the result of extensive inquiries and correspondence, the owner has been able to trace but two perfect copies in the country, one being in the library of the Massachusetts Historical Society, the other in the Prince library. The title is found in the Catalogue of the American Antiquarian Society, but the book, if ever in the library, has been missing for more than twenty-five years, and it may well be doubted if it was ever there. This copy is in the original binding, and contains the autograph of Josiah Dunster, grandson of the first President of Harvard University.

6810 Hebrew Manuscript. The Pentateuch, written on sheepskin.

Concerning this valuable manuscript, the following extract from an article published in relation to it in the Congregationalist and Recorder, and said to be from the pen of its Editor, Rev. Henry M. Dexter, contains some interesting particulars :—

"It is a Hebrew manuscript of the Pentateuch, written on skins, which was brought to this country by the Rev. Dr. Massie, in his late visit. Its history is given in the following extract from a letter from an eminent gentleman in England :—

"'During a journey through Holland in quest of literary varieties and curiosities, particularly of the Biblical and classical description, I accidentally heard, while traveling in the treckshuyt from Leyden to Harlem, in conversation with a French gentleman, that there was in Amsterdam a very ancient and curious MS. in the Hebrew language, written on leather, prior to the invention of vellum or parchment. He could give me no information as to where it was, further than its being in the possession of a Jew in Amsterdam, who was not a dealer in books, but was willing to sell it to a liberal purchaser. On my return to Amsterdam, I took the following method of discovering it, being fearful of advertising for it, lest the possessor should insist on an exorbitant price. I employed two itinerant Jews and a Jewess, who got their living by selling lace to travelers, to inquire among the Jews of Amsterdam if they had any curious Hebrew Bibles, or antiquities of any kind, and promising a liberal reward if they found any great curiosities. The next day came the important news from the Jewess that she had found the greatest curiosity in the world, viz.: a beautiful MS. of the whole law on one roll, above two thousand years old. She took me into the Jew's quarter, where in the house of Mynheer Metz, one of the first houses in the silk trade in Amsterdam, I found this MS. It had been most religiously kept, even with superstitious veneration, in an antique wood case made for this one roll. He gave me the following account of it :—Some time back one of the oldest and most respectable Jewish families from Hungary, came through Amsterdam on their way to England. They had been very rich, but were now much reduced, and were going to England to endeavor to restore their fortune. When they arrived in this city, their cash failed, and they offered to leave me this roll, if I would advance them sufficient money to prosecute their journey to England, stating that it had been in their family from time immemorial; that they could trace their possession of it more than eight hundred years. That it had regularly descended from father to son, and that they had no doubt of its having been in their possession from the time it was written, which must have been about eighteen hundred years, as they were never written on leather after the invention of vellum or parchment. They hoped to redeem it in two years at farthest; but as they did not do so, it leaves me at full liberty to dispose of it.'

"This was about 1815. The English gentleman purchased the roll, and in 1821 offered it to Oxford, which at last decided not to purchase, because they had a MS. Pentateuch, which seemed to be nearly identical. Subsequently the Bodleian Library and the British Museum declined it only on the same ground. Fifty years ago, a clergyman who married the daughter of Dr. Edward Williams — author of a Defence of Modern Calvinism, &c., and who died at the head of Rotherham College in Yorkshire — purchased it for £120. It is now the property of his widow, who is far advanced in years."

It is probable that the above extract assigns to the manuscript a greater antiquity than it deserves, but the owner is assured by competent judges, perfectly conversant with ancient writings, that the ninth century is the latest period when it could have been written, as this has not points, which are found in all Hebrew manuscripts of a later date.

This manuscript, valued at a much greater sum, will not be offered except at a starting bid of at least $500.
